

240

THE Secret History
OF
State INTRIGUES
In the MANAGEMENT of the
SCEPTER, &c.

Political

THE Secret History
OF STATE INTRIGUES
IN THE MARCH OF THE
SCEPTER, &c.

THE Anne, Queen
Secret History
OF
State INTRIGUES
In the MANAGEMENT of the
SCEPTER,
In the late REIGN.

LONDON:
Printed and Sold by S. KEIMER, at the Printing-Press in Pater-Noster-Row. 1715.
(Price One Shilling.)

630

THE SECRET HISTORY
OF THE
SAGE INTRIGUES
IN THE MANAGEMENT OF THE SCHEPTE R

London:
Printed and sold by S. Kearsley at the Swan and Angel in Pauls-Wharf-Row. 1712.
(Price One Shilling.)

THE Secret History
OF THE
S C E P T E R, &c.

THE SCEPTER among the Regalia, is esteem'd the Emblem or Ensign of the Civil Administration, as the Sword is of the Executive Power, or the Crown is of the Majesty of the Prince.

By putting the Crown upon the Prince's Head, he is cloth'd with the Dignity and Authority of a SOVEREIGN: And the first Act of the Subject, after the Crown is so plac'd upon the Head of their King, is to come and do him Homage.

In some Kingdoms, in Spain for Example, so soon as the Crown is plac'd on the Head of their Monarch, the Archbishop turns the King round to shew him to the

A 2 People,

People, and the Heralds proclaim, B E - H O L D T H E K I N G !

When the King is thus crown'd, the Sword is put into his Hand, signifying Power, and then the S C E P T E R denoting P E A C E.

These Three are inseparable from the Office of a Monarch: By his Dignity and Majesty, represented by the Crown, He is plac'd in a Superior Station, entitled to the Subjection of his People, and cloath'd with a Right to command them. By the Sword he is vested with Power; which Power is to be employ'd to defend and protect them, and to execute Justice upon such of them as offend: And by the S C E P T E R He is suppos'd to administer all the Parts of Civil Government in Times of Peace.

This Administration contains many Particulars, such as,

Distributing Justice between Man and Man.

Hearing Petitions.

Redressing Publick Grievances.

Maintaining Correspondencies Abroad.

Encouraging Commerce.

Enacting

Enacting wholsom Laws.

Preserving the Liberties of the People, and the Just Rights of the Crown,

Supporting Religion : And briefly, doing every Thing needful to the Publick Tranquility, and the General Good of the Country.

The S C F P T E R seems to be the most essential Part of the Monarch ; without which, the Crown and the Sword are insignificant Trophies of Monarchy : The S C E P T E R is the End and Reason, tho' not the Cause of the Dignity and Power.

In the due Exercise of the Kingly Office, these Three are inseparable from one another, and ought to be inseparable from the Person of the Sovereign, never to be de-mitted from the Throne. It is true, the First never can be separated from the Person of the Prince : He that lays down the Crown, lays down the King ; the Office fails not to go along with the Ensigns of the Office ; but as to the Sword and S C E P T E R, it has not been always so :
Princes have frequently thought fit to commit them, too much, to the Direction and Management of a Third Hand, but especially the S C E P T E R : Yet this is very seldom

seldom done, but first or last it tends to the Dishonour and Dissatisfaction of the Prince, and to the Injury of the Subject, of which frequent Examples will occur to us in the following History.

Whenever any of our Princes have thought fit, to act so beneath the Office of a Sovereign, as to commit either the Sword or the SCEPTER to the Conduct of a Subject, it has never fail'd to produce bad Effects to themselves and to their Subjects: And if we were to search far into History, we should find that almost all the Divisions and Civil Strife, which have happen'd in this Nation, have been the Consequences of separating the Sword and the SCEPTER from the Crown.

Sometimes it has been occasion'd by the Eneroachment and Ambition of the Subjects, who have endeavour'd to take the SCEPTER out of the Prince's Hand; as in the Case of our Civil Wars, from the Baron-Wars, to the late unhappy Breach in the Reign of King Charles I. wherein the Sword especially was separated from the Crown by the successful Violence of the Subject, in Rebellion.

Sometimes it is occasion'd by the Ease Monarch's committing the SCEPTER into the Hands of Favourites, on Pretence of delivering themselves from the Burthen of the Administration ; and this has been the Foundation of all the Factions, which have agitated these Kingdoms for some Ages, and by which we are devolv'd almost entirely into the Government of Parties.

of

Of this Evil this History shall give some brief Account ; especially as it relates to what has past among us for the last Three or Four Reigns, in which more than Ever, our Monarchs have supinely given up the SCEPTER into the Hands of their Ministers of State ; and they again, for the obtaining and keeping it in their Hands, have fill'd us with the constant Intrigues of Parties to the Destruction of the Publick Peace, and exposing the Kingdom to the unsatisfy'd Avarice of Statesmen and Politicians ; who on every Side have made Shipwreck of the Publick to support themselves, and have wasted the Subject to preserve their private Interest.

After the Civil War was over, wherein Tumult had separated the Sword from the Crown, and at last turn'd its Edge against the Sovereign ; the Restoration of King Charles II. together with the Person of the King, restor'd the Sovereignty in all its Parts ; and setting the Crown upon his Head, he had the Sword and SCEPTER too put into his Hands.

The

The Sword, Good Man, he made as little use of, as he could, for Reasons which every One was then satisfy'd with ; particularly that the Kingdom having been tir'd with War, the People were sated with Blood, and every One embrac'd Peace with a Willingness, natural to Nations exhausted by Armies ; this made it worth no Man's while to seek having the Sword put into his Hands in that Reign.

But the S C E P T E R had another Fate ; the Prince, a Man of Pleasure, and given up to a Luxurious, Effeminate Course, went a great Length, in drawing the Nation after him into a General Debauchery, till the loose Reins of Government hanging down, the S C E P T E R became a Prey to a Popish Party, in the Person of the Duke of York. What dismal Consequences happen'd in the latter End of the Reign of this Prince, from the secret Designs of a Popish and Tyrannick Party, who acted under the Shadow, and by the Influence of that Duke, while the S C E P T E R was thus given up into his Hands, let the Burning of London, the Barbarities in Scotland, the Innocent Blood shed in the Streets of London, and the Cross of Edinburgh bear Witness of ; whilst the King, who was the best natur'd Man, as well as the most merciful King in the World, supinely doz'd in the Arms, and and by the Witchcraft of a Wh—re, suffering the Blood of his People to be shed by him, who had, as we may say, snatch'd the SCEPTE R out of his Hand.

The Reason of going back to this flagrant Example is, that I may, in the more lively Manner, represent to the present Age, this great Truth, and which will, with a double Force, recur to us in the Use of this History, viz. That the best Prince may become as fatal to a Nation, as the worst Tyrant, when once he suffers himself to be perswaded to separate the SCEPTE R from the CROWN, and commit the Civil Administration to the Hands of a Subject.

I might enlarge usefully upon this Example of King Charles II. especially as it was carryed on to an Extream, which, we have some Reason to say, has been our Case since, tho' not in so great a Degree, viz. That this Easy, Good-natur'd Prince, having, as is said above, given the SCEPTE R into the Hands of his Brother, became so divested of the Power of Government, that he could never re-assume it again ; and if Fame lies not, he lost his Life in the Attempt : Something like this will be seen in the subsequent Cases of which this History may speak, tho' we may not run it to so great a Length.

When King Charles II. whether by fair or foul Play, is not the present Case, was peaceably laid in his Grave, the Coronation-Act gravely brought these Three great Friends, the Sword, the SCEPTER and the Crown together again ; and as they put One upon his Head, they put the Other into his Hands, if he could have been so much Master of himself as to have kept them. But it was not the Fate of the Family to Rule by themselves ; nor could the Sense and Remembrance of the Advantage, which He had over his Brother in the preceding Reign, by taking the SCEPTER out of his Hands, nor the Meanness of the Figure, which his Brother made on that Account, no, nor the Fate of the Crown, in Consequence of his managing the SCEPTER warn Him, to prevent his own Ruin by the Consequence of the same Folly ; but supinely fancying himself secure on his Throne, He gave up the SCEPTER into the Hands of those worst of Statesmen, the Priests ; nay, into the Hands of those worst of Priests the Romish ; nay, yet worse, into the Hands of those worst of Romish Priests the Jesuits.

What was the Issue of their separating the SCEPTER from the Crown in King James's Reign, it needs not that this History should repeat. We cannot say, that the King repented of it at all; no, not under his Sufferings on that Account: But it must be acknowledg'd, This blindness was owing to the Extream of Zeal, which that Prince had for the Romish Church, and for their Clergy, which some, more unkind to him, call BIGOTTRY: But it should not be forgotten, That he was not the first of his Family, that had been a Martyr to his Affection for the Clergy, and had laid down his Life at the Feet of the Church.

the

The Kingdom reap'd the Benefit of this Pious Folly in the Revolution; but with this Disadvantage, viz. That Custom had naturaliz'd the Method of demitting the SCEPTER, by the Sovereign into the Hands of his Servants; and in the next Reign, the Courtiers did not so much labour to have the Practice continu'd, as to form themselves into Parties, to secure it to themselves, and prevent One another; taking it for a receiv'd Maxim in Government, That the King would keep the Crown upon his Head, and perhaps being a Martial Prince, would take the Management of the Sword into his own Hand; but for the SCEPTER, that was their Province, and they were Sure of it.

They were not mistaken in their Gues, tho' it was not from the Inclination of the King, to have it so, as it had been in the preceding Reign, but from an Accident in the King's Circumstances, which made it impossible to be otherwise for a while. The King was a Stranger tho' not an Alien : He was of the Blood Royal in a collateral Line, but of a Foreign and Female Branch ; having been bred abroad, and never having been here before, except once at his Marriage of the Princess, it was impossible He should have a perfect Knowledge of Things, much less of Persons, as One brought up in the English Court might have : He knew as much of the Political Interest of England, and how it stood related to Foreign Interests and Nations, as any Prince in Christendom ; but when he came to Administration of Civil Affairs, He could not but be at some Loss, and was oblig'd to see with other Men's Eyes, and hear with Other Men's Ears, more than his own in almost every Thing that came before him.

This naturally devolv'd the S C E P T E R into the Hands of the Subject, and Matters relating to the Civil Government, were necessarily committed to such Men, as his Majesty thought fittest to confide in.

The Choice of these Men was the Subject not of the King's Free-Will only, but of the whole Kingdom's Agency, and this put the Nation into that Flame of Parties which has never yet been extinguish'd, and and which it is fear'd never will : Nay, such is the Fate of this unhappy Island, that it is hard to say, whether it would be well at this Time, that this Fire should be totally extinguished or no. Such is the natural Propensity of Mankind to exercise Power in a Tyrannical Manner, to the Prejudice of those, whom they have in Subjection to that Power, that it is doubtful whether the Check, every Party is to each other, is not needful to the whole, in Order to restrain them from Tyranny and Oppression.

It is true, when ever a Just Monarch, keeping the S C E P T E R in his own Hands, shall rule without the Direction of his Ministers of State, I mean without their Over-ruling Direction, then indeed He may set his Foot on the Neck of this Hydra, and put an End to the very Name, as well as being of Parties in the Nation; H E A V E N say Amen to the Prayer, that it may be so. History will serve to excite the Wishes of Good Men for such an Event, by shewing what Convulsions, in Matters Civil and Sacred, this Island has felt for want of such a Government, in the last Thirty Years.

It was full Three Years after the Revolution, when the King finding He had parted with the S C E P T E R to some, who were not the best qualify'd to use it, was

was oblig'd to shift Hands ; unhappy only in this, That the first Notice of his Mistake did not animadvert to his Majesty, That it was not so much an Errour to give the SCEPTER into the Hands of these Men and not those, as it was, that he gave it into any Hands out of his Own : That his Mistake was not in giving the SCEPTER to Men not qualify'd to use it, but in imagining, that any Subject could be qualify'd for it.

If there be any such Thing as, which Religious Men talk much of, viz. Of Kings being the Lord's Anointed, it seems to lie here, Not in the Oyl Sacred at the Coronation of the Kings, but in being anointed from HEAVEN with the Spirit of Government, of which the Sacred Oyl is the Emblem or Type only.

This Sacred Anointing, or Spirit of Government, is an Attribute, as incommutable as the Blood Royal ; and being Peculiar to those who are born Kings, the King can no more invest a Subject with it, than He can cause him to be a Branch of his Blood, or infuse the Royal Crimson into his Veins.

We will not dispute with any, whether there is such a Spirit of Government, such an Anointing from Heaven, peculiar to all Kings or no : Without Doubt to some there has

has been, and by Consequence may be, and we believe is at this Day.

Now tho' the SCEPTER may be demitted to a Subject, and the Civil Administration be deputed by the Sovereign to his Ministers of State, as it too often has been; yet, He can make no Deputation of the Spirit of Government, the Paternal Genius of a King, the large extensive Soul of a Monarch, whose Eyes regard his whole Kingdom, and who cannot stoop to the mean narrow Views of Private Temper, or Self-Interested Designs: These are the incommunicable Attributes of a Royal Birth, and no Subject can receive them by Deputation.

Hence, when Ministers of State possess an exorbitant Share of the Royal Favour, and encroach thereby upon the Sovereignty, they very rarely, if ever, fail to descend to Oppression, Injustice, Avarice, and all the Consequences of the unbounded Lust of Ambition; and in the end, become Odious to the Princes themselves, and Intolerable to the People.

One Consequence of this is, That it very seldom has happen'd, That any Subject has engross'd the SCEPTER into his own Hands, and has manag'd it for the Good of his Country: A disinterested States-Man has been so seldom heard of, that History is very barren of such a Production; duction ; and many Ages have pass'd since ONE has appear'd, that has really been so ; or if he has, that ever had the good Fortune to have it believed of him.

This is the Reason, that almost all the Favourites of Princes are made more remarkable for their heavy Fall, than their easie Rising ; and not One to an Age has gone off from the Stage, enjoying uninterrupted the full Favour of their Prince ; and which is yet more rare, not One in Fifty, who has been thus vested with the SCEPTER has been able to keep it, with the Approbation of the Subject, if they have enjoy'd that of their Prince.

From the Moral Observation, we return to the Narration of Fact, as by the Word History in the Title, it may be expected, King William having, as is noted, found that he had committed the SCEPTER to wrong Hands, fatally for him omitted that Just Reflection mentioned before, That it was wrong to commit it to any Hands at all ; but sought out for more proper Hands, to sway that weighty Engine of State : In which Enquiry something Fatal as well to the King himself, as to the whole Nation was to be observ'd.

First, This shifting the SCEPTER about from Hand to Hand, made it Cheap, Easie and Contemptible : The Dignity of the Government was lost, and much of the Majesty of Government abated.

the

Secondly, The Subject liv'd in constant Broils One with another ; to share the Profits of the S C E P T E R was duly regarding the Duty of it.

First, This shifting the S C E P T E R from Hand to Hand, made it Cheap, Ease and Contemptible : The Dignity of the Government was lost, and much of the Majesty of Government abated. This appear'd, in that the S C E P T E R became at last subjected entirely to One of these Two Incidents. First, To the Party who had the Money. And Secondly, To the Majority of the House of C—s. By the first of these such scandalous Things were put upon the Government, and upon the King in that Reign, that no History can produce the like : The C R O W N became a general Mortgage to the City ; Deficiencies of Funds, and late Supplies, sent the Sovereign every Year a begging to the Exchange ; and the Treasury was the Monopoly of every Merchant, who had Credit to give Bills of Exchange.

By this Misfortune the Jobbers put the Dice upon the Exchequer, and the Publick Securities bore Discounts ; which if any private Merchant's Bills had gone at, he must have broke and given up ; and had it not been powerfully rectify'd at last by P——t, by Engrōssment of the Bank, and other Measures, the Treasury and Exchequer must in Time have broke also.

The Influences, these Things had upon the Nation, were evident in that famous Strife between the New East-India Company and the Old ; which tho' it was a Debate among a few Citizens and Merchants only at the first, yet was carry'd at last to that length, as to divide the Court, the Government, nay, even the P——t also, and the whole Nation ; and had it gone on, the S C E P T E R must have been plac'd, not as This or That Party prevail'd in the Court, or in the Council; but as the New Company or the Old had prevail'd : And as the King said publickly, There was an absolute Necessity to unite the Two Companies, or to lay down the Government.

The Civil Government was not only influenc'd by Them, and the Houses of P——t influenc'd by Them, but even Elections began to be so far influenc'd by Them, that They sent Men to be chosen all over the Kingdom ; and by the Strength of Money, and other Interests, had so many of the small Boroughs in their Management, that the Country Gentlemen were glad at last to solicit at London for the Assistance of

of the Companies to preserve their Interest ; and to their Reproach be it said, too many apply'd to those Men to sell their Interest to such as were recommended to the Choice : And these Things came to such an height, that the Rates and Prices of Elections were settled upon the Exchange of London, or near it, as the Stocks of the Banks or Companies are now, and rose or fell, as the Managers were pleas'd to direct.

The King was too wise a Prince not to see these Things ; and having seen them, no Wise Prince could be Easie under them. What Remedies were possible to be apply'd, were apply'd ; but the SCEPTER was not remov'd indeed, his Majesty's Affairs would not permit it : The Necessity of Money made it unavoidable to subject the SCEPTER too much to that Party, which could contribute most to the supplying the Exchequer.

In the next Place the House of C——s appear'd absolutely necessary to be regarded, and as the High or Low Interest prevail'd there, so gradually They got hold of the SCEPTER ; this too often oblig'd the King to depute the SCEPTER to those, whom otherwise He would not by his Choice have been concern'd with.

In this Variety, it is no Wonder if the Actions of the King past all manner of Censure ; not only the Conduct of the Ministers was critically examin'd, and the Failings, they were at any Time suppos'd to be guilty of expos'd, but the King himself was reproach'd in an unusual Manner ; the Sincerity of his Designs, as well as the Wisdom of his Council reflected on, and every Publick Affair past the most severe Animadversions, according as those, who could not get, or could not keep the SCEPTER in their Hands, thought fit to exclaim ; for the dispossess'd Party were always murmuring at the Crown.

If the High Party had the SCEPTER, then the other complain'd that the King employ'd those whom He ought to have hang'd ; that He was in a Plot to bring in King James, and dethrone Himself ; that He bestow'd his Favours, and the Rewards of the Government on Tories, and on Jacobites, neglecting those who had made Him King, serv'd Him faithfully, and had stood by Him on all Occasions.

If the Low Party had the SCEPTER, then the Church was turn'd up Trump, and the Clergy alarm'd the People with Chimera's of their Own : Then exorbitant Grants, standing Armies, Massacre of Glenco, advancing of Foreigners, Partition Treaty, carrying away the Money, building Magnificent Houses abroad, while the Royal Palace lay in Ruins at home, giving

Ad-

Advantage in Commerce to the Dutch, and a Thousand such Things as these were the Subject of the other Party's Railery and Complaint.

By these Complaints They frequently made Interest in the Nation ; brought about their Parties alternately to a Majority in the House, and by that Means made their Way to the S C E P T E R. This was the Reason why in that single Reign the S C E P T E R chang'd Hands oftner, than had been known to be done in some Ages before ; and the Hands, who had the Management of it longest, were at last so oppress'd by Numbers, as to be brought to the Bar of the House of Lords for Misconduct, be impeach'd by the Commons, and some of them try'd.

The King unable to direct his Ministers in Action, and less to Protect them when call'd to Account for it, saw Himself weakened by these Things, in such a Manner, that He scarce knew where to commit the S C E P T E R, and much less how to keep it himself, being twice driven to subject Himself, S C E P T E R and All, to the Clamours of the Parties whom He had depos'd, and comply in the meanest Demands : As in the Case of the disbanding the Army, where His Majesty stoop'd almost to a Petitioning his People to allow Him his Blue Guards, and was deny'd.

Then

Then in the Case of the Act of Re-assumption, where He was oblig'd to see the Rewards, which He had bestow'd upon his Generals and Officers, who had spent their Blood, and hazarded their Lives in the Reduction of Ireland, taken away from them again by the P——t, and some of the greatest Men of the Age left to starve in the Nation they had conquer'd by their Valour.

This was the Effect of the S C E P T E R's being separated from the Crown, and of the prevailing Power of a Party, who never left pressing the King, till They got the Deputation of the S C E P T E R into their own Hands, and thereby the Power to do more foolish Things than those, whom They had complain'd of before: For whenever a New Party got the S C E P T E R into their Hands, They presently took Care to satisfie the World that the raising their private Fortunes was the Sum of their Designs; and that as for the Publick, it was fated to be a Prey to the Ministers, and to give Room to the New Ones to do just the same Thing that Others had done before them.

In this Posture of Affairs the King dy'd, leaving the S C E P T E R in the Hands of the same Party, which the Queen, as it is thought, would have put it into, if she had found it otherwise; so that it is observable servable there were fewer Alterations at Court, than is usual on a new Accession to the Crown.

If the SCEPTER was put into Commission, as has been observ'd, during the Reign of the former Kings, it was much more rational to expect it would be so now ; and that a Woman being on the Throne, both SWORD and SCEPTER would be put into the Hands of the Ministers of State, and so it came to pass.

The first Measures the Managers of the SCEPTER took on the Queen's Accession, were to put all the Slur upon the Ministry of the late King, who had gone before them, that it was possible for them to do ; and therefore the first Language which we met with from them, and which all their Publick Addresses, or Applications to the Queen were fill'd with, tended to reproach the preceding Reign ; and abounding with Gasconades, and High-flying Flourishes of what They would do to retrieve the Honour of the Nation, intimating that the Nation had suffer'd in that Point, by the Administration of those who had gone before them. How well they made good what They pretended to in these Things, we shall see further in this History.

The

The S C E P T E R, as is said, was now in Deputation ; the E—— of N—— and Sir Charles Hedges were Principal Secretaries of State; the Lord G——— Lord High Treasurer; the Marquiss of N——— Privy Seal; Sir N—— W——— Lord Keeper; Sir Edward Seymour Comptroler of the Houshold, and all were of those call'd High-Church at that Time, and most of them such as were left in the Administration by the King. But in their Management of the S C E P T E R, they acted with such an unaccountable Warmth to their Party-Interest, and began such a furious Prosecution against all those who differ'd from them, either in Religious or Politick Principles, that they soon fell out with One another, and brought Themselves into Contempt with the whole Nation.

The Clergy now began to preach up their Old Doctrine of Hereditary Right and Passive Obedience; and on Pretence of establishing the Church of England, cast all the Invectives out, which they could invent against the Management of the S C E P T E R in the preceding Reign ; calling King William a Presbyterian, and an Enemy to the Church ; and as the first Prop to restore Religion, They brought on the Bill against the Occasional Conformity of Dissenters ; which, if they had not been been too presuming, in the Opinion of their own Ability, to carry upon their own Terms, they might have obtain'd ; but insisting upon Trifles with the Peers, they resolv'd to have All or None, and so lost the Bill.

Yet their differing with one another sooner broke them, than their differing with the Dissenters ; for while the Statesmen pursu'd different Measures, it was impossible they should go far together. These were of Opinion, that a fiery Zeal against Dissenters was the only Way to establish'd the Church, as being the Means to build Her up upon the Ruin of Her Enemies. Those were of Opinion, that the Christian Religion was not to be preserv'd by Persecution of Protestants, and that Dissenters had a Civil Right to the Liberty they enjoy'd ; and tho' they might be restrain'd, ought not to be oppres'd, much less to be ruin'd for their Consciences.

The Queen, who wish'd that all her Subjects might joyn together in Peace and Union, and was desirous to extend as well her Favour as her Protection to them all, press'd the Politicians to agree, and to unite, that She might be the General Mother of them All : But, alas ! The S C E P T E R was out of Her Hands ; and it was for Her Majesty to act by the former Rules, viz. That as the Majority guided in P——t, so the Court steer'd in Proportion; and the Moderate Party seeming to get the Better there, by twice rejecting the Occasional Bill, They got the Better also at Court, and the S C E P T E R into their Hands for the first Time.

It must not be omitted here, that at this Turn, several of the principal People of the former Party, finding Moderate Councils prevail, came over to the Measures of the Moderate Men, and have been since so confirm'd in the Goodness of their Choice, that they continu'd faithful to the best Principles, and have been esteem'd as the greatest Whigs in the Kingdom; and some of them remain so to this Day, or at least remain'd so to the Time of their Death; These are the late Lord G———, his Grace the Duke of M—— and several others.

The S C E P T E R was now in the Hands of the Whigs, or if you please in the Hands of the Moderate Men: The Queen, who had never till Now had any Experience of that sort of People, except a little, and that not much to their Advantage at the Time of the Revolution, and who had differ'd with them pretty much, upon several Occasions, in the Reign of Her Predecessor, yet began to be very well pleas'd with the Management of the

S C E P-

S C E P T E R : The People express'd abundance of Satisfaction in the Choice Her Majesty had made ; and which is not usual in Matters of Government, the Nation seem'd generally to joyn in the Favours Her Majesty bestow'd on Her Ministers, and thought nothing too Good, or too Great for them.

As an Addition to the Felicity of this Administration, Heaven joyn'd with Her Majesty ; and concurring with the Measures, bless'd Her Arms with Victory, and Her Councils with Success, in such a Manner, as History cannot give Examples of the like, in any Reign since the Conquest. A Chain of such Victories attended our Arms against France, as the like have not been heard of : And at Home, the Union with Scotland was a Transaction, which as no Age before, notwithstanding frequent Attempts, could bring to Perfection, so the Age in which it was wrought stood amaz'd, and it looks like a Dream ; the insuperable Difficulties, which appear'd in the Attempt, having made the most thinking, understanding Men, both at Home and Abroad, look on it as impracticable.

It must be granted, That in the Administration of these Men, both the SWORD and the S C E P T E R were manag'd to the greatest Advantage to this Nation that could possibly be ; and that Her Majesty seem'd to have nothing to do but to wear Her Crown, which was daily adorn'd with New Trophies ; it sat Easie upon Her Head ; She had the Glories of it without the Cares ; and if ever Prince may be said to part the SCEPTER and the SWORD from the CROWN to Advantage, it was the Queen.

The Glory of the British Nation encreas'd Abroad, and the Credit of it encreas'd at Home ; nay, some have gone so far as to say, That notwithstanding the vast Expence of the War, the general Stock of the Nation encreas'd, and we grew rich by our Commerce : Whether we may go that length or not, we shall not venture to say ; but this must be acknowledg'd, That the War was not only well carry'd on Abroad, but was well supported at Home ; the vast Sums demand'd were chearfully supply'd by the People : And albeit much has been said, since that, of Misapplication, and diverting the Publick Treasure, of carrying on Private Interests, aggrandizing Families, &c. So little has been found of that kind, and Publick Justice has been so little concern'd in calling to Account any, who have been so charg'd, that Posterity will be very backward to believe the Charge.

And yet were all true, that has been said, of Men's carrying on their Private Interest, Interest, aggrandizing their Families, wasting of immense Treasures, of their Ambition, their Avarice, and the like; yet while this must be acknowledg'd, That they did the Nation's Busines, pursu'd the Publick Interest faithfully and vigorously, and rais'd our Glory to the highest Pitch Abroad, that it was ever at in the World, and likewise our Credit at Home; this must drown the Pretences of the other, and this History must record it to their Praise, That the S C E P T E R in its divided Station from the Crown, was never better manag'd, than in their Hands, since it was the Fashion for Princes to commit the S C E P T E R to the Conduct of Servants.

But all the Advantages which They reap'd to themselves, by having the S C E P T E R above Seven Years in their Hands, and all the Advantages, which the Kingdom reap'd by their Good Management were lost, or very much lessen'd; the Queen continually disquieted and made uneasy, and the whole Kingdom miserably divided, and embroil'd by the constant Factions and Breaches among the Statesmen, picquing at one another, forming Cabals, and dividing into Parties against One another; continually accusing One another to the Queen, and which was worse, still abusing One another by Libels and printed Papers to the Nation ; the Foundation of all their Quarrels being chiefly upon this One Question, viz. Who should get the S C E P T E R into their Hands : And in these Breaches our History shall chiefly pursue those Parts, which were least known to the Publick, and made least Noise, pursuing thereby the Design mentioned in the Title of a Secret History.

printed

The first Step in which our Managers of the S C E P T E R divided during the Reign of her late Majesty, was in the Case of the Occasional Bill, where the Arcana of the Quarrel were as remote from the Pretences of it, as two Contraries may be supposed to be; by which Means the common People being amused with the Debate about Church and Dissenter, employ'd their Speculations, about the Justice or Injustice of restraining the Dissenters, about the Nature of the Toleration; what was, or was not to be esteem'd Persecution, and such like Theological Debates, not making the least Guess at the true Design which was carrying on at Court, which in brief was nothing but a meer Project to dispossess my Lord N— Sir Edward Seymour and the High-flying Party, and get the S C E P T E R out of their Hands, without any sincere Zeal, either for the Church, as was pretended on the one Hand, or for the preserving the Toleration, which was as warmly

ly alledg'd to be the Intention on the other Hand : Nor does our History injure either Side, in saying the Statesmen on both Sides rowed quite another Way, than they look'd, and equally juggled with the Church and with the Dissenters, crying up their Zeal to their respective Parties, when in brief all the Case was, who should get the S C E P T E R.

The Queen, a Lady of excellent Disposition, and of exemplar Piety, was perhaps in this, as in all the subsequent Breaches among the Parties, the greatest Sufferer ; Her Majesty's Name being inscrib'd to the Measures of whatsoever Party had the S C E P T E R : And such an unexampled Treatment of the Queen, as it could not be conceal'd, so neither can it be deny'd : Either Side in their Turn committed this Assault upon her Majesty, and had their Share in male-treating Her, for what She was as innocent of, as She is now of the Follies we commit, when She is in her Grave.

When the High-Church had the S C E P T E R Her Majesty bore the Reproach of all their Follies : The other People blam'd the Queen for falling upon the Toleration, giving up some of her Subjects to be devour'd by the other, and setting the Clergy to persecute their fellow Christians, from whom they did not pretend to differ in any essential Article, or whom they could not charge charge with any fundamental Error. They began to call the Queen cruel, the Thing of all the wicked Things in the World remotest from her Temper ; and her Reign Tyranny, tho' Her Majesty, as mild and merciful as ever Prince was, rather suffer'd under the Tyranny of Her Statesmen, than acted any Thing tyrannical Her self. But Losers claim to be the Complainers, the Dissenters being threaten'd, cry'd out as if they had actually suffer'd Persecution, and the Queen bore the Scandal of every Grievance, who-ever was the Cause of it,

In the Proces$ of this Debate the Lower-Church got the S C E P T E R, and as Moderate Councils prevail'd, and the Occasional Bills were thrown out, the High-Church-Men rais'd an hideous cry, about the Safety or Danger of the Church.

The Queen, whose Zeal for the Church was not to be question'd, upon any Pretence whatever, no, not by Her worst Enemies, thought She had given such evident Testimonies of Her sincere Affection, and firm adherence to the Interest of the Church, as might convince any Men in the World, and was perfectly surpriz'd to find, That because She was willing in Compassion to the Tender Consciences of Dissenters, and in Discharge of Her Assurances given at Her Accession to the Crown, of Her Gracious Protection, and Her

Her Care of the Toleration, She should be suspected of betraying and abandoning the Church of England. And Her Majesty could not refrain expressing Her Resentment at the Conduct of those Men, who had brought this upon Her, and this threw them out of the Saddle, and gave the Low Party this Advantage, to wring the SCEPTER out of the Hands, which indeed was the utmost End of all their Design; for as it was with the Other, so it was with Them, the Publick Good was the pretended, but all the Strife was, who should get the SCEPTER.

Now tho' this ill Treatment of the Queen was partly the Reason of the removing the SCEPTER, (and they might have seen their Mistake in their Punishment) yet had they not the Prudence to retrieve it; but went on to convince the Queen of the Necessity there was of keeping them out, when they were out, by carrying those Reproaches on Her Majesty to an unusual height, and so making that the Matter of Her Choice, which was before only done, as an Act of Necessity.

Nothing could be more afflictive to Her Majesty, than to hear these Men reproach Her with want of Affection to the Church: A Thing, which of all Others, She thought was impossible any of Her Subjects should charge Her with; and in which, if She might expect any Reproach, it must have been the Reverse of that, and a Charge of Zeal might be brought, nearer approaching to the other Extream. Not, that the Queen was possess'd with that, which they call Bigotry, either of the Kind which belong'd to Her Father, or any of Her Predecessors; yet She had, on so many Occasions, given Testimony of Her Zeal for the Church, and Her Affection to the Clergy, that as the Reproach was unexpected, so it went very near to Her Majesty; and when an insolent Lampoon was shew'd Her, which upbraided Her here-with, it was observ'd Her Majesty was more than ordinarily concern'd at it; the Lines ended thus;

*But now She's Mother of the Church,
She has left Her Daughter in the Lurch.*

It was observ'd, that at the reading these Lines, the Queen's Countenance alter'd; and when the Dutchesse of —, famous for regarding no Church or Religion, but her Pleasure, attempted to put it off with a prophane Jest, the Queen let fall some Tears, and retir'd into Her Closet.

Had any One seen this, that had been touch'd with a Sense of the Queen's Temper, and had the least Affection for Her Person, They must have been more than ordina-ordinarily mov'd with it. But this was not the only Time, when Her Majesty discover'd Herself surpriz'd, that any of Her Subjects should suspect Her Zeal, or the Sincerity of Her Affections to the Church of England: And therefore the Noise, which was then rais'd about the Danger of the Church, was very displeasing to Her Majesty, as may be gather'd from those Words of Her Speech to the Parliament, viz. And some have had the Insolence to suggest, That the Church of England was in Danger under my Administration; an Expression signifying, That Her Majesty thought it monstrous, as well as undutiful, for any of Her Subjects to suggest such a Thing, after such Testimonies, as Her Majesty had given of Her Zeal for the Church.

And indeed it was no less, as many of those very People came afterwards to acknowledge; when that very Zeal of Her Majesty for the Church was the only Thing, that prevented the Ruin of Dr. Sacheverel, for whom Her Majesty shew'd a particular Concern; not that the Person pleaded at all in his Favour, but that the Royal Tenderness for his Office, as a Minister of the Church of England was such, as Her Majesty could not bear to see him punish'd; no, not as She was satisfy'd He deserv'd.

All this Her Majesty suffer'd for Her Zeal to a Moderate Administration ; and during the whole Time that the S C E P - T E R was in these Hands, we find Her Majesty not only in Publick Speeches, but on all Private Occasions, pressing all Her Subjects, and all Her Servants to Moderation, Peace and Union, and urging them to agree among themselves, that the Publick Peace and Prosperity of Her Subjects might not be obstructed.

In the Interval of this Conduct, as an undeniable Evidence of Her Majesty's Affection to that Moderation and Union, which She press'd Her People to at Home ; She had that eminent Occasion of improving it Abroad, viz. By the uniting Her Two Kingdoms of England and Scotland into one Nation ; a Transaction, which as it shall always be nam'd to Posterity, by the Name of Queen Anne, so the Zeal, which the Queen express'd on all Occasions, not only for the doing it, but for the having it finish'd in Her Reign, was the Effort of Her meer Disposition to a general Quiet, to a reducing the Minds of all Her People to a general Calm, and to propagate, as much as in Her lay, the Peace and Union of all Mankind : And if there are Objections to be made against the precipitant making a General Peace Abroad, putting an End to the War with France, France, when that apparent Probability of Success had put Europe in Hopes of effectually reducing France, the entring into which is not the present Subject ; yet it cannot be deny'd, but that Disposition which Her Majesty always shew'd to Peace, Her Aversion to the Effusion of Blood, and Her Earnest Desires to leave Her Kingdoms in Peace, might joyn with the subtil Perswasions of those, who then had the S C E P T E R in their Hands, and might assist to lead Her into their Error ; but of this more may be said in its Place.

However, the Queen's Disposition, as is said, led Her Majesty to pres' Her People to Peace and Union ; yet Her Majesty had not the Felicity to meet with Success, suitable to the Sincerity of Her Designs, the Union with Scotland excepted ; which, as some have said, was carry'd on rather upon Political Grounds, and to answer the pressing Instances of the Queen Herself, who, for ought we know, was the only Person, that had no corrupt View in it, than from any, the People, who manag'd it, had to promote the general Good of both Kingdoms by it.

Yet no sooner was this Great Transaction finish'd, and the P——t compos'd of both Nations united, came to sit, but the Emulation of the Courtiers, the Uneasiness of those out of Play, and the Discontents, tents, which during the Treaty of Union lay asleep, began to break out afresh.

It is an Incident too well known, and of so recent Memory, that the reciting the Particulars might seem needless: But something may usefully be spoken thereof, because the Flame broke out so near the Crown, and so sensibly affected the Queen Herself.

Various were the Causes of these Breaches, and manag'd by various Persons, whose Pretences had their several Glosses spread over them, to render them plausible; but for ought that could be seen by those, that look'd on with unbyass'd and unprejudic'd Thoughts, the End of them all was much the same, viz. To get the SCEPTER into their Hands.

Some charg'd the Ministry with Male-Administration, wasting the Publick Treasure, and aggrandizing themselves.

Some of the Ministry themselves charg'd one another with secret Misrepresenting Things to the Queen, and Attempts to supplant their Superiors in Her Majesty's Favour, and of a visible Design upon the SCEPTER, which Charge was carry'd to that height, that Her Majesty; if possible, to preserve Peace among Her Courtiers, yielded, tho' more against Her Inclination, than perhaps She ever did any Thing of that Kind in Her Life, to part with with the Man, of whom She had then a rising Opinion, which increas'd by that Incident to such a Degree, as did afterwards declare in his Favour, to the supplanting them all.

My Lord H——— in several Speeches, and which his Lordship took the Liberty to publish, plainly attack'd the greatest Man in the Ministry, with some Things, which we have not yet heard, that He was ever confuted in.

After the displacing of the Ministry above-mention'd, Her Majesty found Herself not one Step nearer the Tranquility, which She desir'd, than before ; for they were scarce settled in full Possession of the S C E P T E R, and thought it was impossible for any other Thing, or Person to disturb them ; but a Breach more furious, and which had like to have been more fatal, than any before it, happen'd among the Ministers themselves.

This was, 'when some of the Whigs thought fit to fall upon the Administration of the late Lord Treasurer G—— and the D. of M——, wherein it was apparent, That whatever was the pretended Ground of that Breach, and how plausible soever those Pretences were made to appear ; yet that only true, original Cause, was the fore-mention'd Question, viz. Who shou'd have the S C E P T E R.

And

And if we may credit the Authors of some Pamphlets, written at that Time, the Objections which were rais'd at that Time against the Ministry, had as little Honesty and Principle in them, as ever Things of that Kind have been accompany'd with; and that some of the Persons concern'd in them, have since acknowledg'd, and made Satisfaction for the Mistake.

The Breach gave the Queen great Distaste, and the more, because Her Majesty saw evidently, That the Quarrel was for the S C E P T E R: And that however Male-Administration of Her Ministers, and the Safety of Her Person and Government, were made use of, as the covering to the Fraud, yet all the End was but to dispossess those Two Great Ministers, and get the S C E P T E R into their own Hands. There is no Question, but this gave the Queen such a Prejudice at some particular Persons, as that it was never thoroughly wip'd off; albeit Her Majesty was prevail'd with to receive them into Favour again afterwards for a while.

The S C E P T E R stood its Ground fast and firm Two Years after this; but the Old Sores having been but superficially heal'd, broke out afresh with more Inveteracy, than before: And to avoid entring into the rest of the Particulars, it is sufficient to say, That the Queen, having been distasted, as above, at Persons; and at their Conduct also, the S C E P T E R totter'd for a while in the Hands of those, who had held it so long, and at length shift-ed into the Hands, which the Queen had been prevail'd with, so much against Her Inclination, to dispossess before; and they who had refus'd to share the S C E P T E R with the Man they oppos'd, were oblig'd to resign it wholly to him; and this they did with so much Reluctance, as shew'd they would leave no Stone unturn'd to recover their Hold, and once more to get the S C E P T E R out of his Hand.

ent

What powerful Opposition the S C E P T E R met with, and how all Attempts to perswade the People, who had lost it, to acquiesce in Her Majesty's Pleasure prov'd ineffectual; how vigorously, and a long Time successfully the Hands who had gotten the S C E P T E R, maintain'd it against the Opposition above-mention'd, and how at last they also fell out among themselves, as their Predecessors had done before them, and upon the same Account, viz. To get the S C E P T E R from One another, These Things remain to make up the latter Part of this History.

There are, who affirm, and there seems much Probability in it, that when the New Managers first got Possession of the

S C E P T E R, they had no other View than of managing it in the same Manner, and by the same Measures, which those had taken, who had gone before them : That they had no Intention of making an Hasty and Dangerous Peace : That they had no Design of introducing a Jacobite Party, into any Share of the Administration, and committing the S C E P T E R to those who were Enemies to the Crown : And hence they say it was, That in the beginning of this New Turn of the S C E P T E R, the Queen made frequent mention in Her Speeches to the P—t of Her Resolution to carry on the War with Vigour ; of Her not being satisfy'd with any Thing short of the whole Monarchy of Spain ; of continuing the War, till Satisfaction was obtain'd for all Her Allies, and Expressions of the like Nature, which we have seen, in the subsequent Management of the S C E P T E R, not to be so much regarded, as we think they ought to have been.

We cannot question, but when Her Majesty spoke these Things, She had no other Thought, than of proceeding in such Measures, as were proper to bring these Things to pass ; otherwise we must entertain Thoughts, very unworthy of Her Majesty, who was a most Pious, Religious, Upright Person. Nay, we cannot but encline to believe with those People, we mention'd tion'd above, that the New Managers were at that Time engag'd in no Measures, but which corresponded, with what the Queen had declar'd to be Her Resolution, as above.

But say those, who plead thus in behalf of these Men, the Opposition, which the New Managers of the S C E P T E R met with from the Old Ones, and from the strong Party, which was made against them in the House of C—s, was such and so great, that they saw evidently, if the War was carry'd on, they should be brought to a Plunge; and the Queen being embarrass'd, either by want of Money, or want of Credit, or want of Success, would be driven to the Necessity of taking the S C E P T E R out of their Hands again; and that rather than be driven to this Exigence, they found themselves oblig'd to take in the Assistance of those, whom they had no Design to joyn with; and by the Aid of these Confederates, to bring the War to a Conclusion, ridding their Hands of that Burthen; and that then the S C E P T E R would be more easie to manage: This was more Evident from the Words of a Great Minister of that Time, who being ask'd, if he was not surpriz'd at the general Concert of the Whigs, and their standing off, with such Obstinacy, from an Accommodation; No, no, says he, They only oblige me to make Use of other Hands, which, if it had not been their own Fault, I would not have done.

As this is related from other Mouths, and as the Opinion of some, who perhaps would extenuate the Error of the late Managers, so this History contenting it self with the relating it Historically, enters not into the Enquiry, whether this be a justifiable Excuse, for the said Managers, or for those, who oppos'd them either : Let the Readers judge in that Case for themselves ; but this brings our History to make mention of a Time, when that happen'd, which we hope, shall never be Great Britain's Circumstance again, viz. That the SCEPTER by these Means came to be committed too much, to the Power and Guidance of those, who, as before, were Enemies to the Crown, viz. That the Friends of the Pretender had too near a Concern in the Management of the Administration ; and some People were not without their Fears, that in time that they might get the SCEPTER wholly into their Hands, and then how easy it might be to get the Crown also, they did not know. This seems to be the true, and indeed only Ground for the Apprehensions of Danger, as to the Protestant Succession of Hanover : For how could the People of Britain be without Uneasiness, when when they saw the SCEPTER so much in the Hands of Jacobites; or to speak favourably, the Men, in whose Hands the SCEPTER was intrusted, carrying on the Administration under the Influence of Jacobite Councils, and by the Assistance of such as were known to be notorious Jacobites, both in Principle and Practice; such as the D— of A—, the E— of M—, the well known L— of C—, the D— of B—, H— and many others, whom it boots not to name.

The Managers of the SCEPTER were not ignorant of this, and would gladly have shifted Hands; but they saw no third Party to take by the Hand: The People they had displac'd, refus'd them, and made an Interest too strong against them; so that the Chief Minister could never think it safe, to quit the Hold he had of the Jacobite Interest, having no Party to turn to, that could support him against the obstinate People, who had declar'd themselves irreconcilable, and full of immoveable Resentments. Whether they did well or ill, in rejecting thus all manner of Accommodation with the SCEPTER, is not the present Busines to enquire, the Issue has prov'd them to be more in the right, than many wise men believ'd then at that Time to be. But it has always been thought, that the Success

Success of any Thing is the meanest Argument to justifie the Wisdom of it.

But the Issue of these Things produc'd another Event, which the Enemies of the Managers of the S C E P T E R did not foresee ; and which perhaps, if it had not happen'd, the Victory of the Whigs, over the S C E P T E R, had not been so compleat, as it now appears to be : For the Managers aforesaid being brought to a full Stop, at the Point above-mention'd, fell to the most foolish, and to them fatal, Division, which could be possible among themselves ; by which they not only disconcerted their own Measures, threw up all the Advantages, which their Victory over the Opposers of the S C E P T E R had given them, but laid themselves open to an inevitable Overthrow, as shall appear in the Sequel of this Story.

The chief Manager of the S C E P T E R, as has been said, had been oblig'd to take by the Hand a Set of Men, who, it was evident, had Designs in their Heads, Fatal to the Succession in the House of H A NOVER.

Charity bids us suppose, what we find the Advocates of that Minister's Conduct advanc'd in his Defence, viz. That he believ'd himself capable to preserve the S C E P T E R from the Influence of those Men, as Jacobites, and that he should only ly serve himself of them ; resolving, upon any Exigence, to cast them off, and stick to the Protestant Succession ; and we are the more enclin'd to think favourably of him in that Particular, because of his drawing out, or being cast off from the Management of the SCEPTER afterwards, by a Party less scrupulous in running Lengths, and less reserv'd, as to what Advances they made to the Jacobite Interest, than he had been. But be this as it will, the Difficulties he found himself plung'd in upon that Occasion, were not a Few.

He had try'd all the Arts, his well known Capacity furnish'd him with, to make his Peace with those, whom he had dispossess'd ; but whether it was, that they thought themselves so ill us'd, as that they could not master their own Resentments, or that they had any Assurance of a Conquest over his Measures, or that, as they allow'd, they saw Reason not to depend upon the Assurances, which from Time to Time he gave them of his Sincerity, or whether every one of these had a Share in the Resolutions of that Party, not to joyn with him in any Thing, is not certain ; but this is certain, viz. That being refus'd here, he was daily besieg'd with the Importunities of another Party, in the Administration, To set up other Management of the SCEPTER, as the only Way to preserve it in their Hands, and to prevent the Whigs, who daily grew stronger and stronger, from breaking in upon them, by the Looseness of their Conduct.
of

They told him, That since all Ways had been try'd to accommodate Matters with the Whigs, and that every Step had prov'd ineffectual, they must resolve to act in a more Vigorous Manner, and declare themselves freely and openly to those, who were able to stand by them: That the Church Party were always able to Support, both the SCEPTER, and the Crown also; and that it was for Want of giving sufficient Assurances to the Church, that the SCEPTER was run down in the Manner, as it was: They propos'd to him to make, what they call'd, a thorough Reformation; and to purge the Army, Navy and Court of every Whig, that was left in it. This, they said, would convince the Church-Men, so they call'd the High-flying Party, which they resolv'd to bring in, That he was in Earnest, and sincerely in their Interest; whereas by his acting thus upon the Reserve with them, they had no Confidence in Him; and that many believ'd, that he had a warm Side to the Whigs still, and would one Time or another, betray the SCEPTER into the Hands of the Whigs.

It

It is certain, had the said Chief Manager of the S C E P T E R declar'd himself one way or other, he had prevented much of what follow'd, but keeping himself upon the Reserve to both Sides, he lost both Sides and himself too.

For the Tories finding him still the same, and that they could not act their Measures without him, while he had the S C E P T E R so much in his Hands, after trying a great many Ways to bring him into a Confidence, but to no Purpose, finding him inflexible, they resolv'd to set up for themselves, and get the S C E P T E R out of his Hands.

It requir'd some Time, and more Skill to do this, however they found Means to get so far the better of him in the Queen, as to bring him to a Necessity of drawing out of the Management, which Necessity he made a Virtue of as much as was possible for him to do, and pretended to set up against the Tories: What he would have made of that Part is not known, an unforeseen Accident preventing him, as shall be observ'd by and by.

Some there are, who in Print, have talk'd of great Things, in which he would have expos'd the Party; but those Writers seem rather to desire to have it be so believ'd, than that they have any Thing of Fact, from whence to make it appear.

Nothing is more certain than this viz. That by this new Breach, and the Part, which he acted therein, the said chief Manager entirely lost himself in the World, being drop'd on every Side, and was on a sudden reduc'd to a perfect private Station of Life; nor has he any Thing left to do, unless his Enemies find Occasion to give him some Employment, but to apply himself to his Family Affairs, or his Diversions.

'Tis true, he may have been said to have refus'd the Tories, and this may plead in his Favour on many Occasions; but the People of the other Party cannot so soon forgive the Length, that he went in the Things, of which they complain; or by any Means allow, that he has made them any Amends, by refusing to go a farther Length to oblige a Party, he had too mean Thoughts of to believe they were able either to support him, or to support themselves without him.

It requires some Penetration, into private Transactions, to come at the true Secret, which the Tory Party found out, for the supplanting this Great Minister in the Queen's Opinion; where his Interest had been once so great, as that he would have laugh'd at any one, who should have made the Attempt. But the History of that Part requires no more, than to tell the World, that they found Means to make use of the same Instrument for this Work, by which he had insinuated himself before, and maintain'd himself so long. They pretend to say, that it was easy to find out several Parts of his Conduct, in which they could convince the Queen, that he had fail'd, even in his Duty and Respect to Her Person ; and some others in which he had expos'd even Her Majesty's Interest and Safety ; others say, they wanted not sufficient Arguments to use, from innumerable Examples in his Conduct, which could not fail to incense Her Majesty against him.
World

Be it as it will, whether what they suggested was true or not, if they found Ways to have it pass for true, it was sufficient for their Purpose, and the Event prov'd, that the Queen was brought (beyond the Expectation of almost the whole Kingdom) to consent to part with him, and to remove the SC E P T E R.

It must not be forgotten, that when the first Rumours of these Things reach'd our Ears, and when the Breaches among these People were first talk'd of, we look'd upon it as a Firness of the Court ; That it was a Bite, as the High German Doctor call'd it, That the Ministers had some Ends to serve in it, and were carrying on some Intrigue under Colour of this Piece of Legerdemain, in Order to Couzen the Whigs, but Time undeceiv'd them.

It must be confess'd, this Breach was somewhat Wonderful, and the Fate of the Tories was determin'd by it ; for at this Time, they carry'd all before them : Their Conquest over the other Party was Eminent, whether per fas aut nefas, it is not our Business here : But they carry'd every Question, whether in the House of C—, or in the House of P—, with so high an Hand, and so great a Majority, that it seem'd, that they had establish'd themselves beyond the Power of their Enemies to hurt them, and out of the Reach of any Attack from the Whigs, whom in Triumph, their Pamphlets frequently stil'd, the routed Party : No one could have thought, without Reproaching the Understanding of the Managers of the S C E P T E R, that it was possible they could blow up themselves after all this ; and that, having stood so many Shocks from the Enemy, a secret Concussion, from the Private Passions of their own Members, should shake them into meer Attoms, and dissolve all their well concerted Schemes, which they had laid, into Confusion and Disorder.

But so it was, the Queen, who as was said, was with no little Art manag'd by the same Instrument, whose Agency had been successful to form that Party, and to take take the S C E P T E R out of the Hands of the Whigs, was, it seems, preposseſſ'd in Prejudice of the Chief Manager, and by ploughing with this Heifer, the S C E P T E R seem'd to be determin'd for another Remove.

While this was in agitation, it was the easiest Thing in the World for them to see, that they lost Ground to the Whigs every Day ; and that, if they had so great a Struggle to keep down the Party before, when they were united, they would have much more Difficulty with it, when separated and divided. But demented by their Fate, they would not regard these Things ; they perswaded themselves, that they were able effectually to dispossess the late Manager of his Interest in the Nation, as they had done in the Queen. They counted up his Strength, and reduc'd his Party to about six Noble-men, to wit, the D----- of ----- the L-----'s M----- D----- C----- D----- and L----- : They affur'd themselves that the Whigs would not take him upon any Terms whatsoever ; and they promis'd themselves, that by a vigorous, firm Administration, (and some Measures which should convince the Church Interest, that the S C E P T E R and the M I T R E should, for ever after, become inseparably united) they should gain more than double that Number from the Whigs : In the Assurance rance of these Measures, they declar'd War against the said Manager, us'd him with Contempt, and he treated them with the same.

In Order to fix themselves in the Administration, no sooner was the SCEPTER remov'd, but they resolv'd also upon removing the Sword. It had often been complain'd among them, that, under the former Manager, the SCEPTER was not only not in the Interest of the Sword, but that the latter was some Terrour to the former, having been too much left in Hands, who had a known Aversion to those who manag'd the SCEPTER. This also they made Use of, to complain of him, as guilty of a Neglect of the Person of the Crown; and whereas on the one Hand, it was call'd Moderation, and a regard to the Merit and Services of the Person, it was, on the other Hand, charg'd as an unpardonable Crime.

The more Warm they had been in their Complaints on this Head, the more they were resolv'd to rectifie the Mistake. They said, The SCEPTER could not be manag'd, but with the Concurrence of the Sword; and if the Sword was in Hands not Safe for the SCEPTER, neither could it be Safe for the Crown; and that therefore their first Business was, to have purg'd the Army, as well in Ireland as in Great Britain : Wherein, if Fame lies not, they were resolv'd not to leave One Man in any kind of Commission, who, they were not satisfy'd, was in their Interest, nay, in a settled Conjunction with them.

It is confess'd, this was a bold Step, and struck at the Root of Things ; and had it gone on, they would have had the Army entirely at their Command ; as One of their Great Men was heard to say, they would not, for the future, have been so much afraid of Prosecuting their other Measures, or have been so narrowly and strictly ty'd up to any Measures, as the Managers of the S C E P T E R had usually been : Nay, some were so Vain, as to say, they would in a little Time, set free the C R O W N, as well as the S C E P T E R, from that Subordination, which they had been brought to by the Iniquity of the Times, during the War.

If they had so little Prudence, as to lay themselves open by such Expressions, they could not expect, but others would draw the Natural Consequences of such Discourse, and retort upon them, That they resolv'd to free the Crown from its Subordination to Parliaments, &c. The first Thoughts whereof were enough, to give Wise Men a Shock, and to alarm the Kingdom against such an Administration.

From

From these Designs discover'd in the forward Men of that Party, we saw some Reason to fear, that they aim'd yet further, than they spoke ; and when it was consider'd and observ'd, that tho' they rejected the Old Chief Manager of the S C E P T E R, yet they retain'd the whole Jacobite Interest, which he had been so much blam'd for making Use of ; it could not be easily deny'd, but, that if they had not resolv'd, to overthrow the Succession of the House of Hanover ; yet, that they had resolv'd to put it into the Power of the Crown, to Name what Successor, and what House it thought fit : By which Means the Crown had obtain'd an absolute Authority, not over the S W O R D and S C E P T E R, but in Conjunction with them, over the Laws, Liberties and Lives of the Subject : And it was apparent, that whether Popery and the Pretender were in their View or not, Tyranny certainly was ; and had the Success answer'd their Schemes, they would in a very few Years, have brought these free Nations to an entire Subjection, under an Arbitrary Government, and have oblig'd the People quietly to submit to whatever Limits they thought fit to name.

Those who saw into these Councils, could not be blam'd, for entertaining just Apprehensions of the Pretender, and for alarming alarming the People with the Danger, which threaten'd the Protestant Succession. And albeit some went too far, even to reproaching the Queen Herself, with being in the Interest of the Pretender, which can by no Means be granted ; yet it will always be granted, That whoever were thus embark'd in, and consenting to a projected enslaving of the Kingdom, under the Tyranny of Absolute, Despotick Power, were so far in the Interest of the Enemies of the Protestant Succession ; seeing the said Protestant Succession had no other visible Security, than what was built up on the Laws of the Land, viz. The Acts of Settlement, the Acts of Security, the Act of Union, &c. And whatever Party of Men, or whatever Measures aim'd, and were levell'd at the Laws, which were the Security of the Succession, so far aim'd at destroying the Succession itself : Forasmuch as he, that weakens the Succession, may be justly said to expose it to Danger as he, that dismantles a fortify'd Town, exposes it to the next Powerful Army, which thinks fit to take Possession of it. So far therefore, as the erecting the Prerogative, upon the Ruins of the Laws and Liberties of the People, was the Design of these New Managers, so far they may be said to be Enemies to the Protestant Succession.

H

For

For the Authors of the late Pamphlets, call'd the Staff, whoever they be, to say, that their Lord B ——, let them mean what Person they please, was no Enemy to the Succession of the House of Hanover; and yet acknowledge, that he would have concurr'd in Tyrannical Measures, is to condemn him by that very Argument, in which they attempt to vindicate and defend him. The carrying the Prerogative beyond its due Extent, and erecting the Dominion of the Sovereign upon the Ruin of the Subject's Liberty, what is this to be call'd? Is not this Dispensing Power? Is not this Arbitrary Government? And is not Arbitrary Government Tyranny?

Mark the Climax of Jacobitism; extend the Prerogative, carry the Administration with a strait Rein, punish with Severity, give the Will of the Sovereign a due Reverence, let the Prince command with Absolute Authority, the Subject Obey Passively; This is demanded by Virtue of Divine Hereditary, Indefeasable Right, and this is the Substance of Tyranny: Again, Tyranny dissolves the Constitution, and with the Constitution falls, at one Blow, the Protestant Succession; so that whoever was for setting up an Arbitrary Government, was in the Design, a Jacobeite.

Let

Let it be enquir'd of any Jacobite, if he be an Honest Man, whether he would not hope for the restoring the Pretender, rather in the Breach of the present Constitution, than in the Preserving of it. If the Constitution stands, they are sure to be excluded ; if the Constitution falls, they have a fair Chance for the Pretender ; so that preserving the Constitution, is preserving the Succession ; and to aim at any Breach of the Constitution, is to be a Jacobite.

The Advocates for the late Ministry are oblig'd to joyn Issue upon this Foot, and have no Way to defend themselves, but by endeavouring to say, that the late Ministry did not break the Laws, or any Ways invade the Constitution of this Kingdom ; to this it is answer'd, Very well ; If they did not, then so far they may possibly be free from the Charge of favouring the Pretender ; but then it still remains to be prov'd : Their Accusers say, they did break the Constitution, and did invade the Subject's Liberties ; and if that can be prov'd, then, as above, they are effectually prov'd to be Jacobites, and Enemies to the Hanover Succession.

This Controversie is not to be decided in these Sheets ; it suffices here to state the Question, Let the opposite Parties charge and discharge, as they find themselves fur-nish'd for the Quarrel ; but it is the Opinion of the Writer of these Sheets, that had the New Measures succeeded, which as is above-mention'd, were in the Views of some, who now expected to come into the Administration, it must necessarily have ended in Confusion, the Overthrow of the Civil Peace ; the Constitution must have suffer'd some severe Attacks and Affronts, and Jacobitism would thereby have appear'd to have been the Consequence, whether it had been in the Design or no ; so that it must be confess'd, the Ministry, that was then coming, wou'd have prov'd Real Jacobites at last, and Enemies to the Protestant Succession, whether they had Intentions against the House of Hanover, Yea or No.

It is urg'd by some, that the Breach between some of the late Ministry, just before the Death of the late Queen, was upon this very Point ; and the late Treasurer declar'd, that he saw clearly, that whatever these Men pretended to, or really design'd in their New Measures, yet they would by the necessary Consequence of the Thing, bring the Queen into Difficulties, embarrass Her Majesty, with the Protestant Successor Abroad, and with Her People at Home ; that he pretended to prove this so clearly, as to awaken Her Majesty, and prevent them in all the Measures, sures, they had taken to bring it to pass.

If it be true, as these Men say, they had more Penetration than some, who perhaps meant as well as themselves, but no more than the Nature of the Thing led very Natural unto ; but how they would be sure to detect, or overthrow these Schemes, before the Mischief of them took Place, that is what does not so plainly appear, as we wish for their Sakes it would do ; and it must be only taken upon their Words : Whereas others have given their Opinion, that a little Time more would have compleated the Ruin of Britain, and brought the Ministry and Queen into such Measures, as either would by their Consent have brought in the Pretender, or have given him an Opportunity to have put himself upon the Throne, whether they consented or not ; forasmuch as it wou'd necessary have set the Nation in a Flame, the Queen and Her Subjects at Variance, destroy'd all Confidence and good Understanding between them, and perhaps have kindled the dreadful Flames of Civil War in the Heart of these Kingdoms ; in the Misery of which, the Jacobite Party wou'd have Tyranniz'd, and fishing in these troubled Waters, wou'd have brought forth some Advantage to their Popish Cause, which way soever Things had gone.

In

In the Interval of these Things, the Queen dy'd, which not only chang'd the Scene of Affairs so entirely, as nothing of all these Parties could afterwards be seen; but left undiscover'd several Things in the Measures of the Tories, which wou'd have clear'd up the Mystery of the former Management; and in a little Time, have shewn several People in their own Colours, of whom, as Things now stand, we scarce know what Judgment to make.

The late Manager of the S C E P T E R, of whom so much has been said, hereby lost all the Opportunity, which his Friends said, he would have had to expose the Conduct of the New Men, and to clear up his Own: So that all the Scandalous Things, which his Enemies say of him, and which his Friends say, he wou'd have purg'd himself of, remain as effectually believ'd to all Intents and Purposes, as if the same had been prov'd; and Heaven has deny'd him an Occasion of purging himself, which, if the Queen had liv'd a few Months longer, it is said, he would have done.

A greater Disaster cannot befall any Honest Man, than not to have Leave, Time, or Opportunity to vindicate himself; such a Man sinks under the universal Reproach of a Criminal, without any hopes to rise, and bears the Weight of those those Sins, which he never committed. If this Person had really no Design in favour of the Pretender ; if he never enter'd into Measures to captivate his Country, either to a Popish Power abroad, or royal Tyranny at home, it must be acknowledg'd it is hard, he should be disappointed in the Measures, which, they say, he had taken to clear himself; and to detect those whose Guilt he bore the Load of. On the other Hand, if he had the Guilt upon him, which those men pretend to, he ought to be divested of the Pretence, of being able to purge himself, by laying the Guilt upon others.

That the Queen suffer'd a Concussion of her Passions, from these Incidents, which was prejudicial to her Constitution, and injur'd Her Health, this can not be alledg'd with any Authority : And those, that have hinted at such Things, in their pretended Secret History of these Things, it is to be fear'd, have taken a Freedom to affirm, what they neither have, nor could have any Knowledge of.

Her Majesty's Distemper was Cronick, had been visible in its Approaches for some Time, and there had been, for some Years past, Reason to fear that She would not arrive to any Great Age : And tho' the Attack, which carry'd Her off, was violent, and sudden, yet we have heard many People ple say some Time before, that they had just Reason to apprehend and expect it.

With the Queen fell all the afore-mention'd Schemes of Management ; and the Days are now come, when we see the Sword and the SCEPTE R put again into the same Hands with the Crown; and which adds to our Satisfaction, we see Reason to hope, they shall not be separated again, as they have been. We see the Crown upon the Head of a PRINCE, equally qualify'd to hold the SCEPTE R, and of Abilities sufficient to manage the Sword, and both without Help; and we doubt not, His Majesty will discharge Himself in all Three suitable to the greatest Expectation.

This will be the Best, if not the Only Way to suppress Faction, and to restore the British Throne to the same Grandeur, which it once posses'd in the Days of the Glorious Queen ELIZABETH, when the Act of governing by Parties was not known, and when the SCEPTE R was not put in Commission : When Subjects knew not how to govern their Princes, and the Prince, having a single Heart, and a single Eye to the Publick Good, scorn'd to Tyrannize, as an Act of Degeneracy, and below the Dignity of a Christian King.

Tho'

Tho' in this Reign there is no Danger, yet if hereafter any succeeding Prince shall not take warning by these Calamities, but giving Himself up to his Pleasures, or to his Passions, shall suffer himself to be impos'd upon by his Grandees, and the Administration, taken as it were out of his Hands, by the Statesmen, who are always apt to make that Use of the Indolence of their Prince; if such a Fate should again attend this Nation, whoever lives to see it, will see the Foundation laid of a New and Constant Strife, and the Ruin of the Publick Peace: And such a Prince, tho' he may not be a Tyrant in his Nature, will yet bear the Reproach of the Tyranny of his Ministers, and that justly too; for the People are equally, at least, if not more injur'd by the Tyrannical Administration of a corrupt Ministry, than by the Passions of a Tyrannical Prince.

This Nation has an abundant Cause to pray against all sorts of Tyrants; but against none more, than against the Tyranny of a corrupt Ministry, under an Ignorant or Indolent Prince; when the Ministers of State perswading the Sovereign, that he has no more to do, than enjoy his Ease and Repose, and leave the Care and Weight of Publick Affairs to them; that they have nothing to do, but to sign Warrants and Orders, when they are brought to them, and that they need not trouble themselves to make themselves Masters of the Reason and Nature of Things, or enquire into the Facts. This is the Dangerous Confidence, which some former Kings have put in their Ministers of State, and which generally issues in the Ruin of their Subjects, the breaking the Publick Peace, and destroying that Liberty, which Kings at their Coronation always Swear to Defend and Maintain.

Some have said, that this is the necessary, unavoidable Consequence of a Foreign Prince's coming to the Crown; I deny it, for then it would be unavoidable, that whenever a Foreign Prince comes to the Crown, the Kingdom would be inevitably ruin'd. They alledge, that a Foreign Prince, being a Stranger to Persons and Things, must judge of both by the Direction of those about him; and seeing with their Eyes, and hearing with their Ears, will be subject to make wrong Conclusions, by their wrong Informations.

But to this it is answer'd, that albeit a Foreign Prince is so oblig'd to act under the Agency of other Men's Senses; yet, if that Foreign Prince would but take one Rule in his Actings, he might easily avoid all the Mischiefs of which they speak; and this is only to be sure, that that he does not listen to one Side or Party, and shut his Ears, or his Eyes against the other ; if he does this, he will be sure to divide his Subjects into Factions and desperate Strife ; and shew that he is uncapable of doing Justice, but according to the Partial Dictates of a few : But if he hears all Sides, and judges impartially, he then becomes thoroughly inform'd, is no longer a Stranger to his People, and puts himself in a Capacity to be the King of all his People, as effectually, as if he had been born among them : And such a King alone is able to make his People Happy.

F I N I S.

Just Publish'd,

STrike while the Iron's Hot : Or, now is the Time to be Happy. Humbly propos'd upon His Majesty's Most Gracious late Injunction. Price 6 d.